SIRTS, on its 40th anniversary, wants to promote a reflection on the role of systemic clinical practice in fostering connections and healing bonds, in and between systems, in the encounter with couples, families and community contexts. As systemic therapists and as citizens of this contemporaneity we observe the prevalence of fragmentation in the relational contexts that challenge us. Working in complexity questions us professionals of helping relationships and stimulates us to accompany change and integrate the new paradigms of the mind into generative frames of meaning and new openings. The congress will offer opportunities for debate and dialogue between speakers and participants to stimulate new connections with everyone's contribution.

Contemporary systemic clinics: new orientations, dilemmas, comparisons and integrations...

Original contributions on the development of systems thinking

Other paradigms of the mind and maps of the psyche in systemic work

Proposals that integrate other theories, models, protocols and tools into the systemic approach (e.g. neuroscience, attachment, trauma, mentalisation, etc.)

The conference will be structured in 4 sessions each focusing on a different area in which the systemic approach can counter fragmentation. Each section will include invited speakers and a round table discussion with representatives from different systemic schools of thought, and presentations from the call for papers.

We therefore invite proposals for oral contributions (15') and posters to

segreteria@sirts.org

(according to the attached abstract template)

3.

Caring for bonds in couples, families, and social systems

Examples of good practice and implementation of clinical and network interventions in different contexts

Dealing with new complexities in care contexts

Proposals for organizing new settings and supervising and supporting care teams
